Asthma is one of the most common chronic non-communicable diseases worldwide and is characterised by variable airflow obstruction, causing dyspnoea and wheezing.

Asthma morbidity and mortality have vastly improved in the past 15 years, and most patients can attain good asthma control. Highly effective inhalational therapies are available, However undertreatment is still common, and improving patient and health-care provider understanding of when and how to adjust treatment is crucial. Severe Asthma management starts with confirming the diagnosis followed by treatment of modifiable risk factors and phenotyping. With the introduction of biological therapies, management of severe asthma has entered the precision medicine era—a shift that is driving clinical ambitions towards disease remission. Patients with severe asthma often have co-existing conditions contributing to their symptoms, mandating a multidimensional management approach.

In this workshop, we provide a clinically focused overview of Severe asthma diagnosis and management along with workstations for biologicals usage and bronchial provocation test.
